Excerpt from The Love Letters of Bismarck: Being Letters to His Fiancée and Wife, 1846-1889

To Herr von Puttkamer:

Most Honored Sir, - I begin this communication by indicating its content in the first sentence - it is a request for the highest thing you can dispose of in this world, the hand of your daughter. I do not conceal from myself the fact that I appear presumptuous when I, whom you have come to know only recently and through a few meetings, claim the strongest proof of confidence which you can give to any man. I know, however, that even irrespective of all obstacles in space and time which can increase your difficulty in forming an opinion of me, through my own efforts I can never be in a position to give you such guarantees for the future that they would, from your point of view, justify intrusting me with an object so precious, unless you supplement by trust in God that which trust in human beings cannot supply. All that I can do is to give you information about myself with absolute candor, so far as 1 have come to understand myself.
