After an intense blowout with his two best friends/roommates, Skye finds himself reawakened to the world around him. Living in the City of Angels, and thriving in the bubble that is West Hollywood, Skye is trying to decipher whom he can trust and what is real. But it’s a difficult task when you’re the golden boy in a city created by smoke and mirrors. Even as the golden boy of WeHo, life isn’t all glitz and glamour for Skye. With juggling the many roles that he plays on a daily basis – credential student and high school teacher by day, head bartender, and leading go-go dancer by night – is exhausting. Throw into the mix a possible new relationship with a man who seems too good to be true, while still dealing with the history of a toxic past relationship that seems to rear its ugly head far too often and this is just the tip of the drama iceberg that Skye has to deal with, but deal with it he must if he wants to maintain the spotlight and prove to himself that he won’t be broken down. The Catalyst: Skye is a novel about self-discovery, trust, the possibility of love, and the realization of heartache. A story that dwells into the harsh reality of what life is like in an industry where everyone wants to love you, be you, or take you down. It’s West Hollywood, darling, and in this world one day you’re in and the next day your fifteen minutes are dated.
