Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: ...A pope of such distinguished merit was worthy of being the spiritual father of Alfred the Anglo-Saxon king, who when a child was sent to Rome attended by an honourable escort, and having been received by Leo as his adopted son in the rite of confirmation was also consecrated and anointed king, and sent back, we are told, to his country, with the blessing of St Peter the apostle. 855. Two years' afterwards we find the young prince again at Rome, in company with his father Ethelwulf, who loved him, as we are informed, more than his other sons, and treating him with this distinction and causing him to be consecrated king at so early an age--seems to have given an augury of his future preeminence. Ethelwulf and the young prince, attended by a splendid retinue of Anglo-Saxon nobles, in passing through France, were hospitably entertained by the wise and accomplished Grimbald; and the king Charles the Bald, receiving them with (2) A passage inserted in a later edition of the Saxon Chronicle and given in the "Harmony," p. 18, suggest a douht whether Alfred did not remain at Home during this interval, or even till after the death of Ethelwulf. This version would remove some difficulties, hut it is at variance with nil the other authorities. honour, caused them to be conducted through his dominions with every respectful attention. Ethelwulf bore rich presents to the shrines of the apostles, and was received with the distinction which his piety and munificence demanded. The royal pilgrims spent a whole year at Rome, diligently occupied in prayers and alms-deeds. Nor was the Anglo-Saxon king unmindful of the interests of his people; for he rebuilt the English college or school founded by king Ina, which had been destroyed by fire some years before and for whi...
